TRUMP RENEWS QUESTIONS ABOUT RUSSIA HACKING

Donald Trump raised more questions about Russia's reported role in cyberattacks on U.S. political parties and individuals as well as the timing of the White House's response under President Barack Obama. "If Russia, or some other entity, was hacking, why did the White House wait so long to act? Why did they only complain after Hillary lost?" Trump wrote in a post on Twitter. Trump and his staff have repeatedly dismissed reports over the Russian hacking as "ridiculous," and said Democrats are upset that Trump won the Nov. 8 presidential election over their candidate, Hillary Clinton. In October, the U.S. government formally accused Russia of a campaign of cyberattacks against U.S. political organizations ahead of the election. Obama said he warned Russian President Vladimir Putin about consequences and last week ordered a review by the U.S. intelligence agencies. The CIA has assessed that the attacks were aimed at helping Trump win the 2016 election, a position not endorsed by the Office of the Director of National Intelligence or the FBI, according to a senior U.S. official. REUTERS

DEVRY UNIVERSITY AGREES TO $100M SETTLEMENT WITH FTC

DeVry University, one of a series of for-profit schools under scrutiny because of deceptive ads, has agreed to settle with the Federal Trade Commission for $100 million, the agency said on Thursday. Under the settlement, DeVry will forgive $50.6 million in debt owed by students for tuition and fees as well as pay $49.4 million to students harmed by the deceptive ads. DeVry had been accused of falsely claiming that 90 percent of graduates found jobs in their field within six months of graduating, among other false assertions. REUTERS

DYLANN ROOF GUILTY OF FEDERAL HATE CRIMES

A jury found avowed white supremacist Dylann Roof guilty of federal hate crimes resulting in the deaths of nine black parishioners at a historic church in Charleston, South Carolina, last year. Jurors also said Roof, 22, was guilty of firearms violations and obstructing the exercise of religion for those he shot and killed during a Bible study at Emanuel African Methodist Episcopal Church on June 17, 2015. The guilty verdicts on all 33 federal charges he faced paved the way for the penalty phase of Roof's trial, which is set to begin on Jan. 3. He has indicated he will serve as his own lawyer as prosecutors pursue a death sentence. The jury rendered its verdict after hearing six days of testimony in Charleston. REUTERS

Protesters target Trump in 'Dial It Up' campaign

"Mischievous and fun encouraged" in the protest-by-phone.

AMANDA MIKELBERG
@MetroNewYork
amanda.mikelberg@metro.us

Call him crazy. Call him corrupt. But please, just call him, request activists.

The "Dial It Up" campaign launched on Thursday asks that Donald Trump dissenters tie up public phone lines listed for his businesses to make their voices heard, particularly about his alt-right chief strategist Steve Bannon.

"Let's flood Trump's hotels, restaurants, golf courses, spas, and other businesses with non-stop calls to fire Bannon. Be polite and respectful to the people answering the phones — but as long-winded as possible in your inquiries," it reads on their page on action network.org.

The Trump organization didn't respond to a request for comment.

Participants who sign up on the "Tie up Trump's phone lines until he fires Bannon" page are given list of phone numbers for quick reference. The counter showed that 47 people had joined the cause in the first five hours of the ongoing campaign.

"I had a long conversation with the reservation desk at the Trump International Hotel today, and asked them if I would really be safe there, if they could guarantee I wouldn't be sexually harassed," L.A. Kauffman, who helped organize the Dial It Up campaign that launched Thursday, told Metro.

While 150 or so protesters gathered outside of Trump Tower in the 22-degree weather on

"This campaign is absolutely against harassment of any form."

L.A. Kauffman

Thursday to demonstrate their objections to the president-elect's business conflicts — and the cancellation of his news conference regarding the topic — the dialers delivered their messages more warmly.

"One thing that's been front and center in this effort is treating people answering the phones with respect. Nobody wants to give a hard time to the underpaid employees," Kauffman assured. "This campaign is absolutely against harassment of any form."

The people at Trump Tower told her to send a letter and assured her that Trump will read all mail coming there.

"No wonder he doesn't have time for intelligence briefings," she said.

She encouraged having calling parties to keep the community spirit of protest while staying indoors.

Protesters perceived the cancellation of the news conference as a signal that Trump can't disentangle himself.

"He is filling his cabinet with billionaires and business execs who have made it plain: they intend to siphon as much public tax money into their pockets as they possibly can," Jake Rowland, who braved the cold Thursday, told Metro.

Police: Queens bank robber steals $12,000 from four Chase branches

The suspect, who passes tellers a note demanding money, has been more successful than other thieves who have struck multiple banks in New York City in recent weeks.

Over the past three months, the same man has robbed four Chase bank branches in Queens, getting away with more than $12,000 cash, the NYPD said.

The most recent robbery happened at about 3:15 p.m. on Wednesday when police said the suspect walked into the Chase bank on Liberty Avenue in Jamaica. He passed the teller a note demanding money, and was handed $1,000 cash, police said.

The man, described as between 6-foot-5 and 6-foot-7 and 200 pounds, has followed a nearly identical pattern as the eight other bank robbery suspects who have struck multiple locations in New York City in recent weeks.

In each case, the suspect has approached the teller and handed the note. None of the suspects has showed a weapon or displayed one, authorities said.

Unlike most of the other bank robberies that NYPD detectives have tracked over the past three months, the latest suspect has targeted Chase banks exclusively, and has been successful.

tempted bank robberies in Manhattan, Brooklyn and Queens, bank employees have refused demands for money, police have reported.

That was the case in the last reported bank robbery attempt, on Dec. 8, at an Amalgamated Bank in midtown. In that incident, a diminutive, middle-age man passed a note to the teller demanding money. The teller walked away, and the man left the bank empty-handed, police said. He is still being sought.

The suspect has walked away from each of the reported four robberies with cash in hand, police said. The first two robberies were in Flushing and the next two in Jamaica, all around the same time, between 2 and 4 p.m.

The total take from the four bank robberies:

$12,720. Police released a grainy photograph of the suspect from a video surveillance camera. Authorities said he is about 35 years old, and was last seen wearing a black waist-length jacket, blue jeans and black sneakers.

De Blasio fined nearly $48k for election finance violations

The records show expenses for a makeup artist and a flight for his son Dante.

AMANDA MIKELBERG
@MetroNewYork
amanda.mikelberg@metro.us

Mayor Bill de Blasio is being fined $47,778 for violating campaign finance regulations regarding some of his expenses for his 2013 bid for office, election officials announced Thursday.

The City Campaign Finance Board director Amy Loprest read a list of the violations, which included “failing to report transactions, accepting over the limit contributions, failing to demonstrate spending was in the furtherance of the campaign, and making impermissible post-election expenditures.”

The items cited by the board included expenditures for a personal stylist for himself, his wife Chirlane McCray and his kids, Dante and Chiara.

The most serious violation cited by the board was the payment of $161,000 to the public relations firm Hilltop Strategies, which hired his campaign manager Bill Hyers, after de Blasio was already in office.

Other violations included $550 for makeup for de Blasio and his family on Election Night and $300 to fly his son Dante to Washington to be with him on the anniversary of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.'s “I Have a Dream” speech.

Another $600 labeled for “finance prospecting meetings,” in Santa Clara, California, was seen as suspicious because his daughter attends college in the city.

“While we strongly disagree with many of the CFB’s findings, we are pleased that the 2013 campaign audit is now complete,” de Blasio spokesman Dan Levitan told CBS New York.

The board also called into question why the mayor failed to explain the fundraising methods of several high-profile intermediaries, such as real estate investor Jona Rechin, currently is at the center of a City Hall corruption probe.

The board also fined former City Council Speaker Christine Quinn $14,000 on her failed bid for mayor in 2013, and City Comptroller Scott Stringer $10,500.

BRIEF

NY high school football captain has ‘Heart of a Giant’

Charlie Burt of Mahopac, New York, isn’t your ordinary high school football captain. Despite being born without a left hand, the 17-year-old has played football, baseball, basketball and lacrosse and is extremely active in his community.

It’s that drive, dedication and compassion to both football and his hometown that made Burt winner of USA Football’s 2016 Heart of a Giant Award.

Presented by Hospital for Special Surgery (HSS) and the New York Giants, Heart of a Giant recognizes high school players from New York, New Jersey and Connecticut who were nominated by their coaches for showing passion for the game and matchless work ethic on and off the field.

“There’s so many incredible stories and young men who are inspiring and applying what they learn on the gridiron in their own lives,” Dr. Samuel Taylor of HSS said.

“I think it’s important we recognize the positives even more than even the potential negatives,” he added, referring to reports of domestic abuse, violence and other crimes within the NFL.

Despite heavy competition, Burt stood out. “I think it only takes watching [Burt’s submission] video to get sense for what an incredible young man he is,” Taylor said. “Through overcoming an obstacle at birth he had no control over, it inspires other people to defy limitations that others may put on them.”

Burt said he felt he “had a good shot” when he entered the competition, but winning still came as a surprise.

On Monday, he had been asked by his coach, Mark Langella, to speak to younger students about football, but realized it was a ruse when a surprise guest showed up: Giants running back Rashad Jennings. Jennings and Taylor were on hand to present Burt with this year’s Heart of a Giant award.

The teen, who plans to study biochemistry in college next year, will also be honored on the field during the Giants game against the Detroit Lions at MetLife Stadium on Sunday. “I can’t wait,” Burt said. “I’ve been a football fan my whole life. It’s a big honor.”

Vacant TWA terminal at JFK Airport to get second life as hotel

The TWA Flight Center at JFK Airport in New York WIKIMEDIA

When the Trans World Flight Center opened in 1962 at the New York airport then known as Idlewild, its futuristic, flowing design aimed to make the process of flying faster for travelers.

Now, more than 50 years later — and long after the airport was renamed John F. Kennedy International Airport — that same terminal is looking to keep travelers a little bit longer.

The TWA Flight Center Hotel is expected to open in 2018, ABC7 reported.

The terminal has been empty since it closed in 2001 after Trans World Airlines went bankrupt. Jet-Blue's current terminal was built around the TWA Flight Center, which is a designated New York City Landmark and on the National Register of Historic Places.

The TWA Hotel will integrate architect Eero Saarinen's famous design as part of its $265 million makeover. The hotel will feature 505 rooms and 40,000 square feet of space for meetings and events.

Gov. Andrew Cuomo attended the groundbreaking Thursday for the project.

Ex-Rikers guard convicted over inmate's death

A former guard at New York City's troubled Rikers Island jail complex was found guilty on Thursday of causing the death of an inmate in 2012 by repeatedly kicking him in the head while he was restrained on the floor.

Brian Coll, 47, was convicted by a federal jury in Manhattan of the most serious count he faced, causing the death of 52-year-old inmate

Ronald Spear in what prosecutors called a brutal beating. Coll could face life in prison when he is sentenced.

The jury also found Coll guilty of obstructing justice and falsifying records in connection with a cover-up with other Rikers guards to impede the investigation into Spear's death.

Coll's lawyers' argued that prosecutors lacked evidence to show the kicking caused the death of Spear, who suffered from severe medical problems. A Coll lawyer, Sam Schmidt, said he plans to appeal.

"We're obviously disappointed," he said.

The case is one of several by prosecutors who have targeted workers at Rikers, one of the country's largest correctional institutions. Authorities have been trying to stem violence and corruption that have long plagued the facility, which currently houses

7,226 inmates.

U.S. Attorney Preet Bharara, whose office prosecuted Coll, previously sued the city over a pattern of violence against juvenile inmates, a case that ended after the city agreed to make reforms.

Coll, who will be sentenced on April 24, was arrested in June 2015, nearly a year after the city agreed to a $2.75 million settlement with Spear's family over his death. REUTERS

Muslim student lied about attack by white men

The teen told police the men called her a terrorist and tried to remove her hijab on Dec. 1.

NIKKI M. MASCALI
@MetroNewYork
nikki.mascali@metro.us

An 18-year-old Muslim student who said she was attacked by a group of white men shouting "get out of this country" made the whole thing up, police said.

"Nothing happened, there was no victim," a police source told the New York Daily News.

Yasmin Seweid, a student at Baruch College, was charged with filing a false report after the fabricated incident on Dec. 1, and was arraigned and released early Thursday morning.

Seweid invented the altercation to avoid being punished for staying out after curfew to drink with friends, sources said.

Seweid's parents reportedly made her shave her head following the incident. She faces up to one year in jail per charge.

The teen told police that three white men made references to President-elect Donald Trump as she waited for the No. 6 train at the 23rd Street station at around 10 p.m.

Seweid said they followed her onto the train and called her a "f—ing terrorist" and told her to "get out of this country." One of the men grabbed her, she said, breaking her purse strap, and another partially removed her hijab.

She reported the incident and provided descriptions of the suspects to police.

"I was harassed on the subway last night, and it was just so dehumanizing I can't speak about it without getting emotional," she wrote on Facebook afterward.

Seweid was reported missing last Thursday, but was located on Friday, which caused authorities to question the validity of her statements, especially after no witnesses or video was found of the incident.

After being questioned again by detectives, Seweid admitted that she made up the attack. Her brother, Abdoul, also falsely reported a similar incident in 2012 and was charged, the Daily News reported.

In "Rogue One," Felicity Jones' Jyn Erso joins up with a team — that also includes Diego Luna and a funny robot voiced by Alan Tudyk — hell-bent on stealing the plans to the first Death Star.

Don't call Felicity Jones 'sassy'

THE FUN STARTS HERE

The Oscar nominee didn't want her "Rogue One" hero to be just a tough female character.

matt.prigge@metro.us

Felicity Jones' life has changed a lot over the last two years. Back then, the English actress had just scored an Oscar nomination for "The Theory of Everything," as Stephen Hawking's now-ex-wife Jane. That led to her getting cast as the lead in no less than the new "Star Wars" spin-off. "Rogue One" tells the tale of the team, including Jones' Jyn Erso, that steals the plans for the first Death Star, leading to the events of the first "Star Wars." Jyn is steely and capable, but Jones never wanted her to be a typical tough female character.

Jones, 33, talks to us about her history with "Star Wars" and the one adjective she hopes no one uses to describe Jyn Erso.

I'd actually heard, from a British friend, that there's a tradition in England where on Christmas Day, families watch all three "Star Wars" films, plus some Wallace and Gromit. Is that true for everyone?

[Laughs] I'm not sure if it's a nationwide tradition, but there's definitely family viewings of a film in our household, in which grandparents fall asleep. We've gone and watched everything. We've watched "2001: A Space Odyssey," we've watched "Gone with the Wind." Wallace and Gromit is definitely a staple; that comes after you have your big epic. Also "Love Actually" has to be seen at some point during the Christmas period.

So you're not watching "Star Wars" every year?

I watched it when I was a young girl and was captivated by it. I remember thinking the opening crawl was moving too fast. My cousins and my brother, they were a bit older, so

I wanted to do everything they did. And they were huge fans of "Star Wars."

They're interesting to return to once you've gotten older and maybe snootier. It's easier to see how political they are, as well as character-driven.

What's so special about Luke Skywalker and Han Solo and Princess Leia is they're really relatable. We wanted that in "Rogue One." We didn't want them to be these pumped-up, muscle-y, unobtainable superheroes. They're all really ordinary, ordinary people in an extraordinary situation.

Jyn is a first in the "Star Wars"-verse: She never becomes a damsel in distress. Yet however tough she is she's still vulnerable.

We didn't want her to be just tough and — I hate this word — sassy. [Laughs] If anyone described her as "sassy" I'd just want to be sick in my mouth. She has real spirit and real optimism and hope. She has an innocence, but things haven't always gone according to plan. She's a bit damaged and there's real pain there. At the same time we wanted to have fun with her.

I'm glad that movies don't have those kinds of strong female characters much anymore, where they're basically just men with the gender switched. They're very complex and believable now. Exactly. We went through that period, and now we're coming out the other side.

THE FANTASTIC MISS JONES

PARAMOUNT

"Rogue One" isn't Jones' first big film: She had a small role in "The Amazing Spider-Man 2" and was co-lead in this year's "Inferno." But she's been best known for her strong work in smaller films, such as:

"Like Crazy" (2011)

Jones' first notable American film (pictured) was as the English student who falls for an American, played by the late Anton Yelchin. When the two are separated due to immigration laws, the two actors make their hurt even more palpable than it would be anyway.

"The Unknown Woman" (2013)

As the secret, much younger mistress of Charles Dickens (played by Ralph Fiennes, who also directed), Jones mixed vulnerability with steeliness. It should have been her first run for Oscar gold.

"The Theory of Everything" (2014)

Jones' first Oscar nomination came for playing the independently minded Jane Hawking, whose then-husband, scientist Stephen, would go on to far bigger fame. She sticks by his side, and tries not to fall apart.

Will Smith plays a deeply grieving man whose best friends/colleagues decide to gaslight him to save him (and their company — long story) in "Collateral Beauty." BARRY WETCHER

"Collateral Beauty"

Director: David Frankel
Stars: Will Smith, Edward Norton
Rating: PG-13

"Collateral Beauty" is one of those films where simply summarizing the plot doubles as a savage critique. Will Smith plays Howard, an ad firm exec who turned remote and intransigent after the death of his 6-year-old daughter. In order to save him, his business partners (Edward Norton, Kate Winslet and Michael Pena) hatch a foolproof scheme: They'll hire actors to pose as the embodiments of love (Keira Knightley), time (Jacob Latimore) and death (Helen Mirren). They three thespians will each confront Howard, making it seem like only he can see them.

But his colleagues/friends have another angle: Howard is still on the board at the company, and his reluctance to do his job is causing it to sink. So a private eye will surreptitiously film these encounters. Then they'll simply digitally remove the actors — shouldn't be complicated or expensive — and it will make it look like Howard's too crazy to sit on the company's board. And yet the friends insist that, at some point while being gaslit, Howard will have a therapeutic breakthrough.

Does this make sense? Describing the plot of "Collateral Beauty" feels like the film-critic version of "Drunk History." That this white-hot fever dream somehow attracted two Oscar winners and three Oscar nominees makes the entire film seem like a rich peyote fantasy. That's even before the ending hits us with three silly twists bound to make us feel like we've finally lost it.

And who knows? Maybe we already have. Maybe this feel-good dramedy is really a collective dream, birthed by our shared trauma over a long and nasty and despairing election cycle. Maybe we'll wake up and learn this film, and Donald Trump, and Brexit, and Pokemon Go never happened.

But we're probably not dreaming. Indeed, the only sign that "Collateral Beauty" is definitely real is that Winslet's unwed workaholic spends the movie eyeing sperm-donor websites — because one thing Hollywood will always do is feed us the line that 40-something single women are never complete unless they poop out some kids. MATT PRIGGE

Denzel Washington and Viola Davis, who won Tonys for the 2010 Broadway revival of August Wilson's "Fences," revisit the play on the big screen. PARAMOUNT PICTURES

"Fences"

Director: Denzel Washington
Stars: Denzel Washington, Viola Davis
Rating: R

Denzel Washington's "Fences" might work fine if you watched it with your eyes closed. That's no knock on what's onscreen. But among the chief pleasures of author August Wilson's work are the sounds. His words were honed from listening to the denizens of Pittsburgh's working-class neighborhoods. There's a musicality, a rat-a-tat rhythm to the patter, that you lose when you simply read his work. You need to see them mounted to get the full effect.

Alas, the movies don't do filmed theater much anymore, and "Fences" — the first Wilson to ever hit the big screen, amazingly — only exists because Denzel is Denzel. It's here because he killed a bunch of baddies with Loew's appliances in "The Equalizer." It's his gift to those who missed his Tony-winning run, as well as Viola Davis', in "Fences" on Broadway in 2010.

Washington's third film as director, it keeps things deceptively plain. Wilson's play drops in on Troy (Washington), a former Negro League baseballer who settled into a semi-comfy life as a waste collector. His life alternates between work, hanging out and terrorizing his family, including his long-dutiful wife, Rose (Davis), and his two ambitious sons (Russell Hornsby and Jovan Adepo).

With Troy, Washington's sometimes intimidating brand of confidence and charisma has rarely been put to better use. He's always set to blow, which usually means dressing people down with the power of his debate skills (or simply his stubbornness). As a director, Washington is Troy's opposite: He's generous. Troy may be the loudest and gabbiest character, but the other actors get the chance to engage him head-to-head.

Washington's choice to film in rectangular cinemascope may seem to make it more "cinematic," but it also allows more bodies onscreen at once, helping preserve the rhythm of the words being volleyed. In fact, it would be a shame to close your eyes and focus on the language. You'd miss the simple way Washington is able to bring what's great about Wilson to a medium that, in hands as capable as these, does him just right. MP

"Neruda"

Director: Pablo Larraín
Stars: Luis Gnecco, Gael García Bernal

● ● ● ● ○

This was a good year for the renegade biopic. Don Cheadle's "Miles Ahead" skipped the traditional stuffy, stiff, career-spanning approach and put the jazz god in a mostly made-up tale, involving harebrained thievery and a car chase. Chilean director Pablo Larraín made two of them, both released in December. Of the two, "Jackie" has nothing on "Neruda." "Jackie" is a film symphony that imagines Mrs. Kennedy's fractured headspace post-JFK assassination. "Neruda," like "Miles Ahead," flat-out makes stuff up.

Not all of it, though. "Neruda" is one of those biopics, like

"Topsy-Turvy" or "Young Mr. Lincoln," that zeroes in on a tiny sliver of a famous figure's life. It's about when Pablo Neruda (Luis Gnecco) went from Chile's top poet and outspoken Communist senator to an enemy of the state, disappearing into the underground as his party was outlawed and eventually decamping for Europe. But it's only getting started. Neruda is pursued by Oscar (Gael García Bernal), a dogged and obsessive policeman — who's also a total fiction, invented by the poet himself.

It's more than a cool idea for a biopic. It exercises the notion of using art not to flatter but to investigate. Larraín, via his fictionalized Neruda, wants to get inside his villain's headspace. He goes so far as to have Oscar become not only the co-lead but the narrator, filling the soundtrack with fawning praise alternated with sinister growlings. "Neruda" is meta-sorta-fiction, always calling attention to its own artificiality. But its sincere about wanting to do the impossible: understand, perhaps even forgive, someone who stands for everything you stand against. MP

In Pablo Larraín's "Neruda," Gael García Bernal plays not Pablo Neruda, but a fictionalized police officer trying to track the poet down. THE ORCHARD

Martial arts superstar Donnie Yen swings by the "Star Wars"-verse as a blind, ass-kicking rebel in "Rogue One." JONATHAN OLLEY

"Rogue One: A Star Wars Story"

Director: Gareth Edwards
Stars: Felicity Jones, Diego Luna

In "Rogue One," there's no classic "Star Wars" fanfare, no drab text crawl ascending into the horizon. After the "A long time ago" jazz, we're right in the thick of it. If you found "The Force Awakens" slavishly faithful to the original trilogy (but still delightful), you might get excited. Maybe this prequel/spin-off — about the Rebel mission to procure plans for the first Death Star, leading into the events of "A New Hope" — will actually be its own beast. Maybe it will offer not what we want but something similar yet different. Maybe it won't drown in fan service but look forward, even as it's technically looking back in time. Maybe.

It takes a good while to realize this is a con. It will turn into just another "Star Wars" fan-fic, with shout-outs and call-backs and nods eventually piling up like cars in a John Landis movie, like "The Blues Brothers." Clumsily plotted and often flat-out stupid — halfway through, a key McGuffin is lost simply because someone forgot to grab it, which is just lazy — "Rogue One" boasts thin characters played by great actors scampering about far too many planets with names that sound like obscure venereal diseases. It's a "Star Wars" knock-off that happens to look a lot like a "Star Wars" movie.

The hero, at least, is definitely new. She's Jyn Erso (Felicity Jones), orphaned by Imperial goons, who killed her mother and kidnapped her scientist father (Mads Mikkelsen), forcing him to design the Death Star. She reluctantly joins up with the Rebellion, then lights off on a possible suicide mission along with a motley, rainbow-colored crew, not a one of them a white, American male, which is apparently controversial.

Problem is, no one on the team is particularly interesting. They're played by interesting actors, stuck with characters defined by a single tic. Riz Ahmed is a pilot. Jiang Wen has a big gun. Donnie Yen is a blind, Zatoichiesque ass-kicker. Diego Luna is almost fascinating: a rebel since a wee one, he's haunted by a long past riddled with unethical deeds done in the name of good. That's a fruitful idea the film brings up only to drop — there to give the film the illusion of complexity.

That's "Rogue One" in a nutshell: a collection of good things scattered here, there and everywhere. Even these good things — the fine cast, its diverse heroes and a darker, grittier feel — start to feel like calculated distractions from the gaping void at the center.

Not much can distract from the film's worst move: the frequent appearances of Peter Cushing, who played Death Star honcho Tarkin in the first "Star Wars." Cushing died in 1994 but here he is, digitally replicated before our eyes, because Fred Astaire selling vacuums beyond the grave in '90s commercials wasn't creepy enough. When it starts, "Rogue One" plays like the cool runt of the franchise's litter. By the end, it's a depressing reminder that, awful as the prequels were, at least they had character. MP

The art of Ali

Get a new perspective on boxing great Muhammad Ali from two artists.

EVA KIS
eva.kis@metro.us

"Float like a butterfly, sting like a bee" is how boxing icon Muhammad Ali described his fighting style. If that sounds more poetic than you'd think of boxing or the famed heavyweight champion's technique, prepare to see them in a new way at the New-York Historical Society's latest exhibit.

"Muhammad Ali, LeRoy Neiman and the Art of Boxing" collects the little-known watercolors, sketches and paintings of Neiman, a New York-based artist who befriended Ali in 1962, when he was just Cassius Clay and still two years from winning his first heavyweight title.

Neiman went to a match at St. Nicholas Arena on the Upper West Side, recalls curator Lily Wong, "and in the dressing room before the fight, he just started sketching Clay — and Clay looks over and is like, 'What are you doing over there? I can do that, gimme that thing!' Grabs the sketchbook and adds his own little drawing to the corner."

That page — which marked the beginning of their friendship — and other Ali pictures Neiman drew over the years, often sitting ringside with a sketchbook and anything else at hand are part of the exhibit: Works on display were created on a ticket from the Clay-Liston fight, a program, judge's scorecards. "They add a little bit of extra in-the-moment feeling," says Wong. "These vivid colors really capture the moment and the energy of the fight that you don't necessarily get in other mediums."

Just as unlikely as the idea of watercolors depicting a violent sport is Ali himself: an athlete who wanted nothing less than to be the best sitting out his prime years because he refused to fight in Vietnam. In the second half of the exhibit, "I Am King of the World,"

LeRoy Neiman often drew and painted Ali from ringside, creating intimate and dynamic scenes. ALL PHOTOS EVA KIS

45 intimate photographs by Madison Square Garden's longtime in-house photographer, George Kalinsky, show Ali in action and at rest at the height of his career.

But there are also photos of Ali outside the ring, where his stand against the Vietnam War after joining the Nation of Islam in 1964 led to having his championship title being stripped and his license to fight suspended for three-and-a-half years, at the age of 25, in March 1967. In portraits he stands alongside Malcolm X, and Elijah Muhammad, who gave Clay the name Muhammad Ali.

Back in the Neiman gallery, there is even a watercolor of Ali praying sometime in the '80s or '90s. Until his death earlier this year, Ali battled Parkinson's disease, which was likely related to the violence of the sport he loved.

"His faith was also very important to him," explains Wong. "A lot of people who write about him or knew him later in life say he took solace in his religion, so it's an important thing to remember that with a figure that's so famed, that there is this life after retirement that can be meaningful personally and to the public."

The exhibit also includes photographs taken by Madison Square Garden's George Kalinsky.

A few pieces of Ali memorabilia are also on display.

Cheers with Pastrami Pils

It's a special Chanukah for Shmaltz Brewing Company, which is celebrating 20 years of making Jewish-themed, certified kosher beers this winter. A special occasion deserves a special beer, but... a pilsner make with pastrami?

"Beer has often been referred to as 'liquid bread,' so the sandwich characteristics are almost easy as pie," says Shmaltz head brewer Richie Saunders about turning the Jewish deli staple into a sippable pint.

There was no actual meat used in the brewing process — Saunders teased out the smoked meat flavor using salts, black pepper and smoked malt, but the fresh horseradish was grated right into the barrel along with caraway for the customary rye bread. The result is a 5.5% ABV pilsner, brewed to be easier to indulge in than, say, trying to eat an entire pastrami sandwich in one sitting at Katz's.

3 Things to watch for when the Giants face the Lions Sunday

The Giants will see just how good their defense really is when they play Detroit on Sunday afternoon.

KRISTIAN DYER
@KristianDyer
sports@metro.us

It could be a big step forward for the New York Giants this week, the possibility to get a 10th win and solidify a grip on a wild-card berth. But the Detroit Lions, with their own playoff ambitions, create several matchup headaches, not the least of which is their resiliency this season.

The Giants, now 9-4 following a Sunday home win over the Dallas Cowboys, have now won seven of their last eight games. The defense is playing well despite the loss of Jason Pierre-Paul for the next month. But that offense ... oh my. Just 10 points against Dallas and they had two fumbles and an interception.

That's the kind of football that might get you into the playoffs with a talented defense but won't get you too far.

Detroit, for their part, come in with five straight wins and have won eight of their last nine games.

Three things to watch from the Giants in Week 15:

1 The comeback kids

The Lions did it again on Sunday, getting to 9-4 in comeback fashion in a 20-17 defeat of the Chicago Bears. Detroit has made playing catch-up a trend this year but have closed out games strong, Sunday's win the eighth comeback victory the team has had this season.

"Well, first of all, we are playing good enough defense to keep it close and within range and, secondly, I think we have guys that don't wilt in tough situations, particularly down the stretch when oftentimes the nerves get the best of them sometimes, our guys have not shown that to be the case," Lions head coach Jim Caldwell said this week.

A Giants-Lions showdown could be repeated in the postseason. GETTY IMAGES

"The old adage that you don't rise to the occasion in those situations, but you sink to the level of your preparation, we try to work hard at those things and we have been fortunate to win a few."

2 Not exactly thumbs up

On one side, Giants star wide receiver Odell Beckham Jr. has his own thumb injury, a knock that might have led to two drops in the win over the Cowboys (although he still had a touchdown and 94 receiving yards). The Lions too have a significant player with a hand injury as their quarterback Matthew Stafford has a finger injury that seemed to affect him in Week 14, although he's practicing in full this week.

Stafford did throw "just" 35 passes last week, the lowest he's attempted he's had over the last three weeks. He is expected to wear a glove to help his throwing hand come Sunday.

3 Getting their rush on

A lot has been made about the poor play of the Giants offensive line this season, a unit that is arguably the weakest on their team. But the Lions aren't exactly a stellar unit themselves and bottom-half in the league in a couple of key categories such as sacks (30 allowed) and giving up 62 quarterback hits on the season. In fact, their offensive line might actually be statistically worse than the Giants.

For comparison sake, the Giants have allowed 19 sacks and 42 hits on Eli Manning this season.

With the Giants pass rush against the Cowboys last week, they might be able to get to Stafford regularly.

3 things to watch for when the Jets welcome the Dolphins on Saturday

Jets head coach Todd Bowles likes to rationalize any defensive breakdowns as miscommunication rather than what they really appear to be - blown coverages, via mental mistakes. So, judging by the plethora of big plays allowed by Gang Green this season, Bowles's squad definitely has a failure to communicate.

When the Jets (4-9) host the Dolphins (8-5) in Saturday night's standalone primetime affair, they'll only be doing so in a spoiler's role, as New York's postseason hopes were realistically dashed weeks ago and Miami is on the cusp of earning a Wild Card spot in the AFC.

The Dolphins will be without starting quarterback Ryan Tannehill, though, as he's out with sprained knee ligaments. Perhaps the exclusion of Tannehill, who started the first 77 games of his career before suffering a left knee injury, last week, against the Arizona Cardinals, is just what the struggling Jets' secondary needs.

It'll be a battle of backups, Saturday night (NBC, 8 p.m. EST), as the Jets try to even the season series - and more importantly, put a huge dent in the Dolphins' playoff hopes.

1. Give them some Moore

Veteran backup Matt Moore hasn't started a game in five seasons, but for ardent Jets' fans, they'll remember it vividly - a 19-17 Dolphins' win over Gang Green. Moore (22-of-32 for 135 yards, 1 TD, and 2 INTs) wasn't great by any measure on that 2012 New Year's Day matchup, but what he is for Miami is a calming influence and a backup who has the utmost respect of the locker room. His teammates will play for him, judging by the way the offense responded in last week's comeback win, and especially with the postseason so close they can taste it. Moore went 3-of-5 for 47 yards and directed the game-winning drive against the Cardinals, so the team heads to MetLife Stadium confident he can string together a good performance despite minimal reps all season.

2. Heavy run load

Moore needs to be efficient in the passing game, but if Gase loses any faith in him early, look for the Dolphins to employ a run-heavy attack - led by Ajayi. He has 956 rushing yards and seven rushing touchdowns on the season, but luckily for the Jets, the Dolphins' run game has waned a bit in recent weeks. Ajayi had 111 rushing yards and a touchdown in the Miami win the last time they faced off, so it'll be important for Gang Green to not allow the burgeoning runner to gain traction early.

3. Can Petty repeat?

The second-year quarterback got better as the game went on, last week in San Francisco. Down 17-3 at the half, it was Petty who led the Jets all the way back and forced overtime, as New York stole one at Levi's

Stadium. Petty went 23-of-35 with 257 yards and an interception against the Niners, but it was how he played down the stretch when he engineered a game-tying drive to send the game into overtime followed by his game-winning jaunt that led the Jets to the walk-off win that gives hope. TONY WILLIAMS

NOTICE OF CLASS ACTION SETTLEMENT HEARING

METROPOLITAN MUSEUM OF ART ADMISSIONS CLAIM

This Notice is to inform all persons who purchased either admission to the Metropolitan Museum of Art (the "Museum") or a membership in the Museum on or after March 5, 2007 of a proposed Settlement of a class action brought against the Museum on your behalf in the Supreme Court of the State of New York.

The lawsuit alleges that the Museum's disclosures of its current admission fee policy violate consumer protection laws by not adequately disclosing to visitors that they may enter the Museum upon payment of an amount of their choice ("pay what you wish"). The Museum denies those allegations.

The parties have agreed to a proposed settlement under which the Museum, without any concession, finding of wrongdoing, or agreement regarding the adequacy or inadequacy of the current disclosures, will revise its signs, website, and other disclosures of its "pay what you wish" admission fee policy. No money will be paid to class members, and no adjudication of any claims for money damages they may have will occur.

The Court will hold a hearing on approval of the Settlement at 10:00 a.m. on March 14, 2017, in Courtroom 228, 60 Centre Street, New York, NY 10007. Any class member may present objections he or she has to the Settlement.

Aries Your involvement in organizations that look out for the underdog will bring you fulfillment. Sprucing up your appearance will turn out well.

Taurus Problems will arise if you attend an industry party and overindulge. Take better care of your health by limiting your intake and by engaging in physical challenges.

Gemini Do something that will make you happy or feel good about your appearance and lifestyle. Romance is encouraged.

Cancer Get your responsibilities out of the way. Put in some overtime at work and position yourself for advancement. Later, you'll have more time to spend with friends.

Leo Share your feelings. A change of scenery will do you good. Dress the house for the holidays or make travel arrangements that will bring you closer to a loved one.

Virgo Concentrate on meeting your needs and making the most with what you've got. A former colleague will have an offer or suggestion that will position you to excel.

Libra Don't give in. Someone will try to talk you into taking on responsibilities that don't belong to you. Don't sign up for something that could conflict with your plans.

Scorpio Don't take on too much. When dealing with children, emphasize honesty and integrity. Make improvements to your living quarters and protect against loss or injury.

Sagittarius Consider what you enjoy doing, and look for ways to integrate that into your everyday routine. If you love what you do, you will do it well.

Capricorn An emotional moment will open your eyes to what lies ahead. Refuse to get involved in something that has the potential to backfire or spin out of control.

Aquarius Don't labor over situations you can do nothing about. Stay focused on keeping the peace and making personal improvements.

Pisces Update your look or pick up something that will add to your appearance. Shopping sprees will lead to worthwhile bargains. EUGENIA LAST
